Exercise:

- Ask clients to visualize themselves in a tug-of-war with their emotions.
- Have them consider what would happen if they let go of the rope.
- Encourage them to reflect on the relief that comes from acceptance rather than resistance.

Metaphor: The Mountain Climb

Exercise:

- Have clients draw or visualize their own mountain climb, identifying obstacles and values that motivate them.
- Discuss the importance of each step, regardless of how small, in reaching the summit.

The bus ride metaphor teaches clients that they are the driver of their own life, while thoughts and feelings are passengers. This encourages the idea that clients can choose how to respond to their internal experiences without being controlled by them.

Exercise:
