

the caldecott award the winners and the honors

The Caldecott Award is a prestigious honor bestowed annually to the most distinguished American picture book for children. Established in 1938, the award was named after the British illustrator Randolph Caldecott, whose lively and humorous illustrations had a significant impact on children's literature. The Caldecott Award celebrates the art of illustration and recognizes the vital role that visuals play in storytelling, making it a cornerstone of children's literature in the United States.

History of the Caldecott Award

The Caldecott Medal was initiated by the American Library Association (ALA) to encourage original and creative illustrations in children's literature. It is awarded by the Association for Library Service to Children (ALSC), a division of the ALA. The award is not just a recognition of the illustrations but also highlights the synergy between text and image in children's books.

Key Milestones

- 1938: The first Caldecott Medal was awarded to "Animals of the Bible" illustrated by Dorothy Lathrop.
- 1966: The Caldecott Honor was introduced to recognize additional noteworthy books that may not have won the medal but are still deserving of recognition.
- 2021: The award was celebrated for its 83rd year, showcasing the evolving landscape of children's literature and illustration.

The Selection Process

The selection process for the Caldecott Award is rigorous and involves several key steps:

1. Eligibility: To be eligible for the award, a book must be published in the United States during the preceding year and intended for children up to age 14.
2. Nominations: A committee of members from the ALSC is appointed annually to evaluate eligible books. They can consider various factors, including creativity, originality, and the quality of illustrations.
3. Voting: After thorough discussion and evaluation, the committee votes on the winner and the honor books. The deliberations can be intense, reflecting the passion and dedication of the members to children's literature.
4. Announcement: The winners are typically announced during the ALA Midwinter Meeting, generating excitement and buzz throughout the literary community.
