Origins and Formation of the Divine Nine

The Divine Nine refers to a collective of nine historically Black Greek-letter organizations (BGLOs) that were established to support African American students during times of segregation and discrimination. These organizations emerged primarily between 1906 and 1930, a period when African Americans faced severe racial barriers in higher education and society at large. The Divine Nine was formed as a response to the social exclusion experienced by Black students, providing a platform for leadership development, academic excellence, and community engagement.

Historical Context of Formation

In the early 20th century, African American students attending predominantly white institutions or historically Black colleges and universities (HBCUs) encountered racial segregation and limited social outlets. To counteract these challenges, students founded fraternities and sororities that emphasized mutual support, scholarship, and activism. The establishment of these organizations was not only a form of social resistance but also a means to cultivate a sense of identity, pride, and empowerment among Black youth.

Collective Identity as the Divine Nine

The phrase "Divine Nine" was coined to collectively describe these nine organizations, which include both fraternities and sororities. United under the National Pan-Hellenic Council (NPHC), founded in 1930, these groups collaborate to promote community service, educational advancement, and cultural awareness. The term highlights their shared heritage and enduring commitment to uplifting African American communities.

Profiles of the Nine Organizations
