Origins of the Word Picnic

The word picnic first appeared in the French language as pique-nique during the 17th century. It originally described a social event where each participant contributed a share of the food, often enjoyed in a communal setting. The term combines the verb piquer, meaning “to pick” or “peck,” with the noun nique, referring to something small or insignificant. Thus, pique-nique essentially meant “picking at small things” or a meal composed of various small dishes brought by attendees.

French Etymology and Early Usage

In France, pique-nique was associated with informal gatherings where people brought assorted dishes to share.
