The yellow wallpaper serves as a powerful symbol throughout the story. Initially, it repulses the narrator, but as her mental state declines, she begins to see patterns and figures within it. The wallpaper represents the constraints placed on women, both socially and mentally. As she becomes increasingly obsessed with it, the wallpaper transforms into a metaphor for her own entrapment and desire for freedom.

2. How does the narrator's relationship with her husband affect her mental health?

The narrator's relationship with her husband, John, is central to her decline. John embodies the patriarchal authority of the time, dismissing her feelings and concerns as mere hysteria.
