Examples of TJ Problem Solving Essays

Examples can provide a better understanding of how to structure and present your ideas. Below are two hypothetical examples of TJ problem-solving essays.

Example 1: Addressing Food Insecurity in Local Communities

Identification of the Problem: Food insecurity is a pressing issue affecting many families in our community. According to recent studies, approximately 15% of households struggle to access nutritious food.

Analysis of the Problem: Several factors contribute to food insecurity, including poverty, lack of transportation, and limited access to grocery stores. Families in low-income neighborhoods often rely on fast food or convenience stores, which do not offer healthy options.

Development of Solutions: To address this issue, I propose the establishment of a community garden program. This initiative would involve local residents in growing their own fruits and vegetables, providing them with fresh produce and fostering community engagement.

Evaluation of Solutions: The community garden program would have several benefits. It would reduce food insecurity, promote healthy eating, and strengthen community ties. However, challenges could include securing land and funding, as well as ensuring participation from community members.

Conclusion: Food insecurity is a critical issue that requires innovative solutions. By implementing a community garden program, we can empower residents, improve access to healthy food, and create a sense of community.

Example 2: Reducing Plastic Waste in Schools

Identification of the Problem: Plastic waste is a significant environmental problem, with schools contributing to this issue through the use of single-use plastics in lunchrooms and classrooms.

Analysis of the Problem: Plastic waste leads to environmental degradation and harms wildlife. Many students are unaware of the impact of their plastic consumption. Educating students about environmental issues is essential for fostering responsible habits.

Development of Solutions: One solution is to implement a "Waste-Free Wednesday" initiative in schools. On this day, students would be encouraged to bring reusable containers and utensils, reducing single-use plastics.

Evaluation of Solutions: This initiative would raise awareness about plastic waste and promote sustainable practices among students. However, it may face resistance from those accustomed to convenience. To alleviate this, schools could provide incentives, such as rewards for classes with the least amount of waste.

Conclusion: Reducing plastic waste in schools is vital for environmental conservation. A "Waste-Free Wednesday" initiative can educate students and promote sustainable practices, making a tangible difference in their habits.
