This article delves into the themes, stylistic elements, and historical significance of this poem, providing a comprehensive understanding of Wheatley's tribute to George Washington and its implications.

Historical Context

The Life of Phyllis Wheatley

Phyllis Wheatley was born in West Africa around 1753 and was brought to America as an enslaved child. Purchased by the Wheatley family in Boston, she was taught to read and write, which was uncommon for enslaved individuals at the time. Her talent for poetry emerged early, and she quickly gained recognition in literary circles.

- Enslavement and Education: Wheatley's education provided her with a unique perspective on liberty, oppression, and the human condition.
- Literary Recognition: By the age of 20, she published her first book of poetry, "Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and Moral," making her the first published African American female poet.

The Revolutionary Era

The period during which Wheatley wrote was marked by the American Revolution, a time of significant upheaval and change. The struggle for independence from British rule was intertwined with the quest for freedom and rights, themes prevalent in Wheatley's poetry.

- Political Climate: The American colonies were striving for independence, and figures like George Washington symbolized the fight for liberty.
- Role of Women and Minorities: While the revolution promised freedom, many, including women and enslaved people, continued to face oppression.

Overview of the Poem

“To His Excellency General Washington” is a tribute to George Washington, who was then the commander-in-chief of the Continental Army. The poem was written in 1775 and reflects Wheatley’s admiration for Washington as a leader and symbol of hope for America.

Structure and Form

Wheatley’s poem is structured in the form of an ode, which is a lyrical stanzaic form that praises a person or event. The poem consists of several stanzas, each contributing to the overall theme of admiration and reverence.
