4. Asafoetida (hing): a pinch (adds depth to the flavor)

Cooking Instructions

Now that we have all the ingredients ready, let's dive into the step-by-step process of making Vegan Chana Masala.

Step 1: Prepare the Chickpeas

If you are using dried chickpeas, you will need to soak them overnight in water. After soaking, drain and rinse them, then cook them in a pressure cooker or pot until they are tender. This usually takes about 30-40 minutes in a pressure cooker and 1-2 hours in a pot. If using canned chickpeas, simply drain and rinse them before use.

Step 2: Sauté the Aromatics

1. Heat the oil in a large skillet or saucepan over medium heat.
2. Add the cumin seeds and let them sizzle for a few seconds until fragrant.
3. Add the chopped onions and sauté until they turn golden brown, about 5-7 minutes.
4. Stir in the minced garlic, grated ginger, and green chili (if using). Sauté for another 1-2 minutes until fragrant.

Step 3: Prepare the Tomato Base

1. Add the pureed or chopped tomatoes to the skillet. Cook for about 5-7 minutes until the tomatoes soften and the oil starts to separate from the mixture.
2. Add the turmeric powder, coriander powder, cumin powder, red chili powder, and salt. Stir well to combine and cook for another 2-3 minutes.

Step 4: Add the Chickpeas

1. Add the cooked chickpeas to the tomato base in the skillet. If using canned chickpeas, just stir them in without additional cooking.
2. Pour in about 1-2 cups of water, depending on the desired consistency. Stir everything well.
3. Add the bay leaf and bring the mixture to a boil. Reduce the heat to low and let it simmer for about 15-20 minutes. If you want a creamier texture, you can add coconut milk during this stage.

Step 5: Finishing Touches

1. After simmering, remove the bay leaf. Stir in the garam masala and adjust salt as needed.
2. If you prefer a tangy flavor, add lemon juice at this stage.
3. Garnish with chopped cilantro before serving.
