Founding and Early History of Washington DC

The founding of Washington DC dates back to 1790 when the Residence Act designated a federal district along the Potomac River. The city was designed to serve as the nation's capital, separate from any state jurisdiction. Pierre Charles L'Enfant, a French-American architect, was commissioned to create the city's original plan, characterized by grand avenues and open spaces. The location was chosen strategically to balance interests between northern and southern states.
