The causes of World War I are complex and multifaceted, involving a mix of political, economic, and social factors. This section explores the primary reasons behind the outbreak of the conflict in 1914.

Militarism and Arms Race

Militarism played a critical role in escalating tensions among European powers. The major nations engaged in an intense arms race, expanding their armies and navies to demonstrate power and readiness for war. This buildup created a climate of fear and suspicion, making diplomatic resolutions more difficult.

Alliances and Diplomacy

The system of alliances divided Europe into two main blocs: the Triple Entente, consisting of France, Russia, and the United Kingdom, and the Triple Alliance, comprising Germany,

Austria-Hungary, and Italy. These alliances were intended to provide security but ultimately contributed to a larger-scale conflict when hostilities began.

Nationalism and Imperialism

Nationalistic fervor and desires for imperial expansion intensified rivalries among nations. Ethnic groups sought independence, and countries competed for colonies and influence worldwide. This heightened the stakes and increased the likelihood of war.

Immediate Cause: Assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand

The assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria-Hungary by a Serbian nationalist in June 1914 served as the immediate trigger for the war. This event set off a chain reaction of mobilizations and declarations of war.
