Most programs are designed to meet the standards set by the Yoga Alliance, the leading organization that sets accreditation standards for yoga schools. Training can range from 200-hour to 500-hour programs, with 200-hour programs being the most common entry point for new teachers.

Types of Yoga Teacher Training Programs

- 1. 200-Hour Training: This is the foundational program that introduces participants to the basic principles of yoga, including asanas (postures), pranayama (breath control), meditation, and philosophy. It usually covers:
 - Basic anatomy and physiology
 - Teaching methodology
 - Yoga history and philosophy
 - Practicum (teaching practice)
- 2. 300-Hour Training: This advanced training builds on the foundation established in the 200-hour program. Participants delve deeper into specialized practices, anatomy, and teaching skills. Topics often include:
 - Advanced asana techniques
 - The study of yoga styles (e.g., Vinyasa, Hatha, Restorative)
 - Therapeutic applications of yoga
 - Business skills for yoga teachers
- 3. Specialty Training: These programs focus on specific areas of yoga, such as prenatal yoga, yoga for athletes, or yoga therapy. They are ideal for teachers looking to expand their expertise and cater to specific populations.

Key Areas of Focus in Yoga Teacher Training

To successfully complete a yoga teacher training program, students must master several key areas. Below are the critical components of a comprehensive yoga teacher training curriculum.
