Understanding the Phrase "You Too" in Sign Language

The phrase "you too" is commonly used in spoken English to reciprocate a sentiment, wish, or compliment directed at someone else. In sign language, conveying this reciprocal meaning requires specific signs and often additional context to ensure clarity. Sign languages, including American Sign Language (ASL), British Sign Language (BSL), and others, have their own unique ways to express "you too," reflecting the cultural and linguistic characteristics of each community. Understanding these differences is crucial for effective communication and avoiding misunderstandings.

The Meaning of "You Too" in Signed Communication

"You too" serves as a way to return a greeting, compliment, or good wish. For example, if someone signs "Have a good day," the response "you too" expresses the wish for that person to have a good day as well. This reciprocal phrase is essential in polite interactions and social bonding within signed conversations.

Importance in Deaf Culture

Reciprocal expressions like "you too" play a significant role in Deaf culture by emphasizing mutual respect and friendliness. Using the correct sign and accompanying non-manual signals for "you too" ensures that the sentiment is conveyed authentically and respectfully.

How to Sign "You Too" in American Sign Language (ASL)

In American Sign Language, there is no single sign that directly translates to "you too" as a compound phrase; instead, it is expressed through a combination of signs and facial expressions. This section explains the step-by-step process to sign "you too" accurately in ASL.

Step-by-Step Guide to Signing "You Too"

The most common way to express "you too" in ASL is by signing "YOU" followed by a sign or gesture indicating "ALSO" or "TOO."

- Sign "YOU": Point directly at the person you are addressing with your index finger, which clearly indicates "you."
- Sign "ALSO" or "TOO": Use the dominant hand in a "Y" handshape (thumb and pinky extended) and tap the side of the chin or move the hand forward, depending on regional variations.

Combining these signs while maintaining appropriate facial expressions conveys the meaning of "you too."

Alternative Signs for "Too" or "Also"

Other signs that indicate "too" or "also" include:

- The sign for "same," which involves both hands in an "S" handshape moving side to side together.
- The sign "again," which can sometimes imply repetition or reciprocity depending on context.

- Simply using a nod combined with "you" to imply "you too" in informal settings.

Variations and Contextual Uses of "You Too"

The expression "you too" may vary based on regional dialects of sign language, individual signer preferences, and the conversational context. This section explores these variations and explains when and how to use "you too" appropriately.

Regional and Dialectical Differences

Different Deaf communities may have slight variations in how "you too" is signed. For example, some regions may prefer a more explicit sign for "also," while others rely heavily on non-manual markers. Understanding these regional differences helps in communicating effectively across different sign language users.

Contextual Applications

"You too" can be used in various contexts, including but not limited to:

- Reciprocating greetings such as "Good morning" or "Have a nice day."
- Responding to compliments like "You look great."
- Returning well wishes, for example, "Happy birthday!"
- Expressing agreement or shared feelings in conversations.

Non-Manual Signals Accompanying "You Too"

Non-manual signals (NMS) such as facial expressions, head nods, and body language are vital in sign language communication, especially for phrases like "you too." These signals enhance the meaning and tone behind the signs.

Facial Expressions

When signing "you too," a friendly smile or a nod reinforces the reciprocal goodwill. Eyebrows may raise slightly to indicate attentiveness and positivity. These subtle cues are important for conveying sincerity and warmth.

Head Movements and Body Language

A slight forward lean or head tilt combined with the sign for "you" followed by "also" can emphasize the personalized nature of the message. Nodding at the end of the phrase further confirms the reciprocity of the sentiment.
